33Fifty: The Commonwealth Youth Leadership Programme

PRESS RELEASE: 24 October 2013

Recipient of gold award for the 2013 Commonwealth Essay Competition meets Queen's Baton Relay in Lahore.

Last week Raissa Chughtai added her message to the 33Fifty Baton Book that is accompanying the Queen's Baton Relay across the 70 countries and territories taking part in the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games.

Raissa, a student at Lahore College of Arts and Sciences, was chosen to sign the book in recognition of her gold award in the 2013 Commonwealth Essay Competition. Her message to Commonwealth countries and to the participants of the upcoming 33Fifty leadership programme was about the lack of access to education – a challenge affecting too many of today's youth. She called on young people to ensure that access to education would not be an issue facing future generations.

33% of the world's population lives in the Commonwealth and 50% of those are under 25. The Baton Book, specially produced by De La Rue, is part of 33Fifty, a leadership programme for Commonwealth citizens aged between 18 and 25 run by the Royal Commonwealth Society and Common Purpose. It aims to develop young leaders who bring people together, reconcile difference and lead change.

The Baton Book is an opportunity for one young person from each country or territory the baton visits to send a message to Glasgow 2014, in particular to the participants of the 33Fifty programme that will take place prior to the Games. Applications for 33Fifty opened on Wednesday 16 October and 100 participants will be chosen from across the Commonwealth. See www.33fifty.org.

Director of the Royal Commonwealth Society, Michael Lake, said: "On its return to Glasgow, having travelled 190,000 kilometres across the Commonwealth, the Baton Book will contain messages from 70 young people spanning six continents. Not only is the book a wonderful expression of Commonwealth citizenship, but it's an opportunity for young people to highlight the issues that are important to them as part of the most high profile event in the Commonwealth calendar – the Commonwealth Games."

CEO of Common Purpose Charitable Trust, Julia Middleton, said: "If fifty percent of the Commonwealth's population is under 25, that's over 1 billion people. I sometimes wonder what proportion of the Commonwealth's leaders are over 55. I hope that this book - as it travels across the Commonwealth with the Queen's Baton - will give that younger fifty percent more of a voice for people like me to hear."

Group Director of Communications at De La Rue, Robert Hutchison, said: "At the completion of its journey, this unique, handmade document will carry the inspirational words and messages of the Commonwealth's young people to the leaders of the future. De La Rue is proud to be part of 33Fifty's Baton Book initiative and looks forward to seeing the book's pages filled by the young signatories as it travels the world."
